MY DIARISED LIFE

PATRICK A ERNEST 1988 ~ 2020

My Diarised Life

Objective evidence of a life well lived

As the years of our lives roll by, the passage of time hastens, to the point where our ability to recall what transpired during our past years becomes blurred. I would reflect and think "what happened in 1993 or what was I doing in 2004?" Well, I'm lucky, because I can open my diaries, flick through the pages and piece together some of my past – sometimes in great detail. My diaries allowed me to write a 200+ page memoir about my 33 years at Diver Consolidated Industries. This book, however, focusses on everything else I have documented and retained in my diaries.

Interestingly, at the time I didn't quite fathom the significance of retaining keepsakes and memento's in my diaries. I never developed a long term plan to eventually compile this book. Perhaps there was a sub-conscious drive within me to do this so as to enable this pursuit to amount to something noteworthy.

My diaries mean a lot to me. I once had my briefcase and diary stolen from my car at a work function at Leonda in Hawthorn. I was distraught, not for the spare alloy rim that was stolen, nor the damage to the boot lock barrel – rather I was distraught that my Year 2000 Diary was in the hands of God knows who. I was so relieved when it was returned to me.

You will observe that Jann and I love the cinema, rock concerts, the theatre and travel. Many a movie, theatre and concert ticket is displayed in the upcoming pages.

I also endeavoured to write as neatly and clearly as I possibly could in my diaries – to me they were my own personal works of art. Mind you I do concede that my handwriting style and approach, in the earlier years, left a lot to be desired.

So here it is….my very own existential time capsule.

All my diaries from 1988 to 2020

The following are snippets, mementos, notations, recollections and highlights from my diaries.

1988 to 2020.

A diarised collage of events.

Life As a Diarist

For all and sundry
Each to their own
But when it comes to my diaries
Something I'll never disown

From 1988 to present day
To a year I have them all
And as I try to reminisce
I have an avenue to recall

My work tasks and duties
All are duly noted
Work and social items inserted
While my diaries look rather bloated

As a scribe and calligrapher
Appearance I value much
Layout is very important
As I add my personal touch

Most acquaintances, I have observed
When the year comes to an end
Offload and discard their diaries
A practice I could never defend

As the year unfolds
And the year is defined
It's great to look back
When it's time to unwind

And as my memory warehouse
Gradually gets dusty and old
It's within my trusted diaries
That life's proceedings can unfold

The Melbourne print media
Have accompanied me all the way
From Knight to Leunig and all the rest
They all had their part to play

My diaries have become
Time capsules of sorts
Revealing things long forgotten
My life, my loves, my thoughts

Concert, theatre and sports event tickets
All a tapestry to behold
My attendance to such long forgotten
Until the turning pages unfold

I will never underestimate
The importance of my journals
The life perspectives they provide
Will forever be eternal

A long work history
Going way back and far
A lot of content to work with
Enough to write a memoir

Not quite a life story
More like a collage of outcomes and events
In bringing this all together
Of a life well spent

A little bit of history
My world through my eyes
A compilation of many events
That never fail to surprise

To stop actions slipping through the cracks
My diary pages list things to do
Tick boxes with action items aplenty
And most are ticked off too!

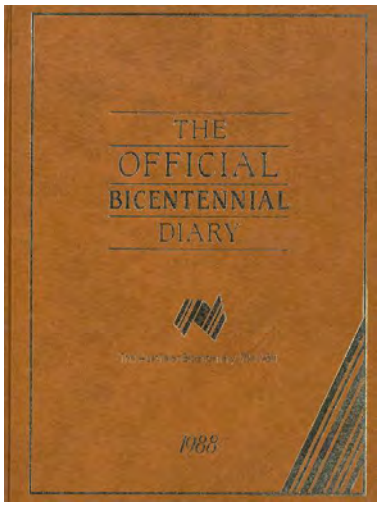

So when I stopped work to reflect
And my Diaries I gazed upon
Little did I realise
What I was essentially sitting on

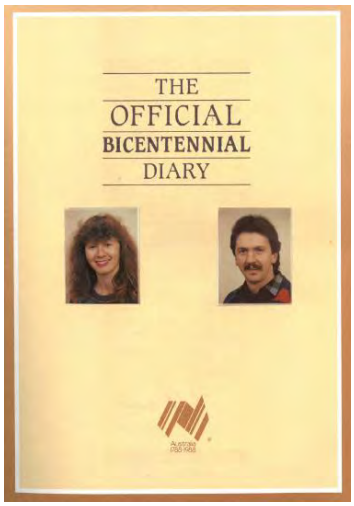

I have embraced my life as a Diarist
With 32 diaries on show
And today I continue my diarised pursuits
With passion, spirit and gusto
And the joy these have given me
Only a committed Diarist would know

KEW VIC 3101

Dear Janette & Patrick Ernest,

On September 18 we will go to the polls to elect a State Government which will take Victoria into a new century. I write to ask for your support.

Together we have achieved a great deal. We have all contributed to a better lifestyle and we have revitalised our state. In 1999 we have more people employed in Victoria than at any time in our history. We are growing and creating new businesses, new opportunities and new jobs. But there is more to be done as we prepare for fresh challenges and opportunities.

The Liberal Government has shown a strong commitment to Kew. We have:

- allocated more than $10 million to improve Information Technology facilities and buildings in Kew's schools;
- committed $13.7 million in 1998 to St George's Hospital to improve aged and extended care facilities; and
- made an ongoing commitment to improve the amenity of properties and parkland adjacent to the Eastern Freeway - $4 million to reduce freeway noise.

Victorians have laid the foundations for a future which promises increasing prosperity as we apply our advantages in science, engineering and technology to create new jobs which we never dreamed of for our children. We will use our growing economy to improve education, strengthen our skills base and satisfy increased demand for health care and community services.

Your Liberal Party candidate, Andrew McIntosh, wants to continue our tradition of delivering strong, effective and responsive representation for you, the people of Kew.

I ask you to give Andrew McIntosh your vote to ensure your area has a voice that counts – in Government – for the people of Kew and Victoria.

Yours sincerely,

Jeff Kennett

Dragons defeat Mordialloc

Our first home game for the year saw Northern Districts defeat Mordialloc by 17 points in wet conditions.
The first quarter started at a furious pace, with us grabbing the lead early in the game, only to relax in the second and third quarter, and give Mordialloc a sniff. Most aspects of the game were pleasing, the only negatives were playing a short game and not manning up immediately, which let us down.
In the last quarter, when the challenge was there, we were able to lift our work rate and kick away from our opponents. When we do the team orientated things we look and play so much better. The new players have slotted into the side well, adding skill, pace and hardness to our side, which is needed if we are going to improve from last season.
Overall it was a pleasing result, it also good to be able to win the games when they are in the balance, which shows a lot of character within side.

Final Score: Northern Districts 6.6.42 d Mordialloc 3.7.25

Best & Awards: (Alphabetical order) P. Bahen, S. Bibby (Chow Garden), S Calefa , L. Cordes (12 Cans), P. Henshall, B. MacDonald, L. Pugh (Epping RSL), D. Read (6 Cans), M. Sheather (Opal Menswear), G. Turnbull

Goals: S.Keech 1, L. Pugh 1, G. Turnbull 1, M.Millhouse 1, H. Masri 1, P.Bartlett 1,

Thin Lizzy top poll

02 AUG 2004
Herald Sun

MUSIC fans have voted for their favourite live rock album of all time - Thin Lizzy's Live and Dangerous.

The album was recorded by the Irish band, famed for hits such as The Boys Are Back in Town, in 1978. Strangers in the Night, released a year later by heavy metal outfit UFO, comes second in the poll for Britain's Classic Rock magazine.

Made in Japan, by Deep Purple, which was once credited as the world's loudest band, came third in the list of 10.

If You Want Blood, You've Got It, by AC/DC came fourth, followed by Led Zeppelin's How the West Was Won.

The Who's Live at Leeds, recorded in 1970, is sixth followed by the Judas Priest album Unleashed in the East (1979).

Eighth is Hawkwind's Space Ritual (1973), followed by Exit Stage Left by Rush (1981), and Irish Tour by Rory Gallagher (1974).

At last Sir Paul McCartney's 64

19jun06

AS birthdays go, it is unlikely to be his best. Instead, Sir Paul McCartney opted for a remarkably low-key celebration to mark turning 64.
Video

He was to be joined by family yesterday for a quiet barbecue at his home in Peasmarsh, Surrey.

One person who wasn't there was his estranged wife Heather. Until last month, they had been sharing the sprawling estate. Friends denied reports she was hoping for an invitation.

The muted celebrations were far from the optimism Sir Paul showed in the Beatles song When I'm 64, released when he was 25

As a Beatles fan, I looked forward to the day when Paul McCartney turned 64.

SPORTING WORTH
RICK MILNE

I have a small sheet of green writing paper (in mint condition) bearing the signatures of the 1938 Australian Ashes squad (all except W.A. Brown), the last side to represent Australian before WWII. On the flip side, someone has written: "When wearing your garland of friendship fasten in a bud for me."

Duncan Imbesige

RM: "On a small sheet of green paper" means it's probably a page torn out of an autograph book. About $300.

I have every AFL grand final Record, in mint condition, from 1966 to 2006 . . . Any idea what that collection could be worth?

Dean

RM: Dean, your collection starts just in time to have some reasonable value. The 1966 St Kilda premiership program sells for around $250 if mint, the 1970 Carlton over Collingwood is worth around $100, the rest average about $40 each till 1978, then $20 each after that.

Send letters to: Sporting Worth, 5 Cooraminta Street, Brunswick, 3056; mrpp@primus.com.au; phone (03) 9387 4131; fax (03) 9387 8340.

What doctor's dad ordered

A TOORAK house purpose designed and built for the Edelsten family in 1961 is expected to fetch about $2 million, sources say, when it is auctioned next month.

Edelsten matriarch Esther, mother of medical entrepreneur Geoffrey and brother Rodney, is selling the Harry Ernest-designed home at 42B Lansell Road, on the elevated south-west corner of St Georges Road.

Esther, who co-owned retail lingerie chain Linda Leigh with her late husband Hyman, is downsizing. According to Woodards Elsternwick selling agents Juanita Kelly and Aaron Goode, the outgoing Edelsten home retained many retro features throughout its various makeovers.

Spread over two levels, it includes four bedrooms, formal and informal living areas, an outdoor entertainment area and a low-maintenance garden. Melbourne's highest-profile Edelsteins — Geoffrey and wife Jeryme (left) — live in a luxury city apartment with an indoor bowling alley.

I didn't know my dad moonlighted as an architect….
To quote the second paragraph;
"Edelsten matriarch Esther, mother of medical entrepeneur Geoffrey and brother Rodney, is selling the Harry Ernest - designed home at 42B Lansell Road Toorak, on the elevated south-west corner of St Georges Road".

We attended the Jam Factory to see the movie DRIVE on the 4th of December, 2011.
"There are no clean getaways"

In December 2011 DCI released The Metal Press newsletter.
My message, as Operations Manager, was as follows;

2011

"This year has presented all of us with some unique and at times difficult challenges. It's how we deal with these challenges that will define us as an organisation. If we stick together as a team and work towards understanding the needs of our co-workers, only then will we grow and prosper. The key to team work is our willingness to see those around us who are in need of help and support and giving it without being asked to. I know that this is something we all can do both in our work and family lives.
So as we move towards another Christmas and New Year, and in the spirit of giving, sharing and teamwork, I would like wish you and your families a happy and safe holiday festive season and I look forward to seeing you all in 2012".

LIVELY PORT VILA IS THE HEART AND SOUL OF VANUATU.

There are 83 idyllic islands that make up the amazing archipelago of Vanuatu. And Port Vila, the capital city on the island of Efate, is where all the action is. With its earthy beauty and ancient Melanesian heritage, this ""Land Eternal"" has been voted one of the happiest places on the planet. Then again, if your typical day consisted of floating in a hidden lagoon, lounging under a gnarly banyan tree, cooling off in a waterfall shower and snacking on freshly picked fruit, you would have a permanent grin too.

Diving is more than a sport here... it's an obsession. With an ocean that resembles a swimming pool and an unreal array of deep-sea grottos and underwater wrecks, it's really no surprise. You'll find just about every outdoor recreational activity on this island. Take a hike through lush terrain to the Mele Maat Cascades. Go parasailing for an amazing view of the island. And if shopping in an outdoor market is considered recreational, you can check that one off your list too. Port Vila is a duty-free zone where you'll find everything from stylish sarongs to unique handcrafted souvenirs.

Relax. You're On Vacation.

SCHUTZ

Schutz DSL (Australia) Pty Ltd fined for herbicide in creek

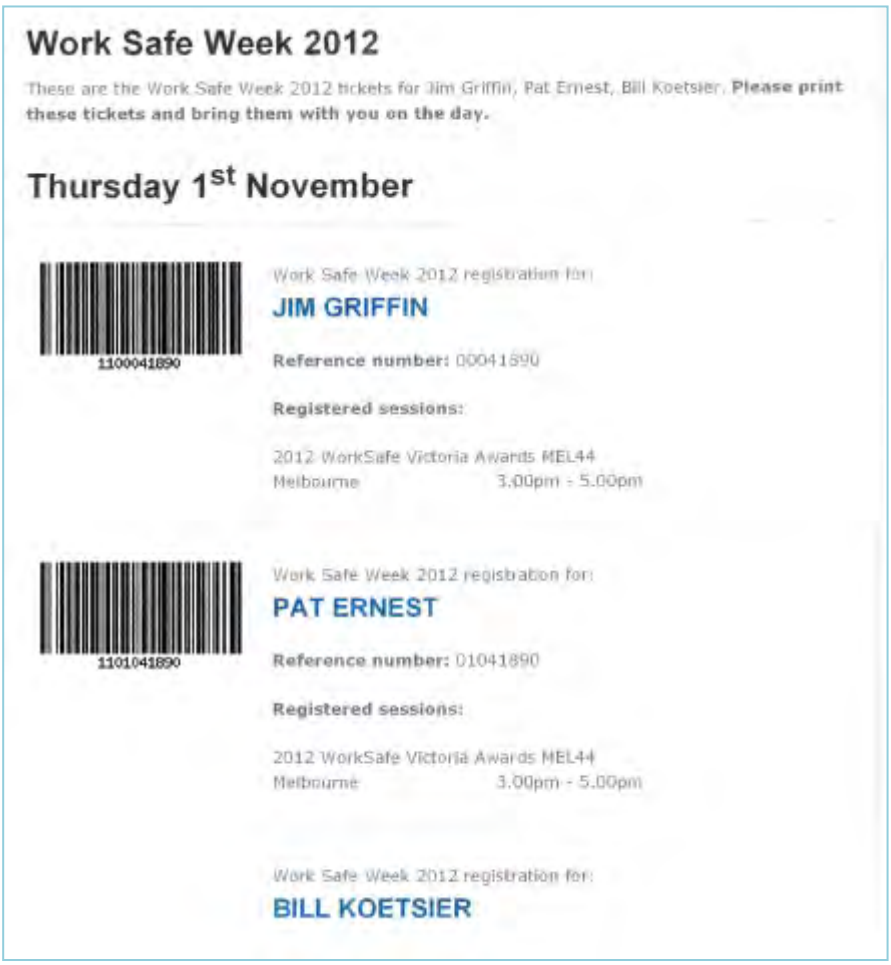

On 22 June 2012, EPA licensed drum reconditioner SCHUTZ DSL (AUSTRALIA) PTY LTD ("Schutz") pleaded guilty in the Sunshine Magistrates' Court to two charges laid by the Environment Protection Authority ("EPA"). The charges, under sections 39(1)(a) and 27(2) of the Environment Protection Act 1970 ("the Act"), alleged that, on 21 September 2010, a discharge from Schutz's Laverton North premises respectively polluted the waters of the nearby Cherry Creek/Drain and breached a condition of the EPA licence.

The unforeseen discharge occurred when a recently installed pipe temporarily connected the wastewater treatment plant to the stormwater system, such that wastewater containing chemicals entered the stormwater system. The main chemical was Trifluralin, a herbicide that is very toxic to aquatic life. Just below the end of the stormwater drain where the Trifluralin first entered Cherry Creek, EPA samples showed a concentration over 500 times higher than the ANZECC recommended level for aquatic protection. The Court was told that the Creek, although a degraded waterway at the discharge point, flows into Cherry Lake in Altona – a valuable habitat for wetland plants and water birds – although no harm was alleged.

On the day of the incident, Schutz complied with EPA officer instructions to shut down its wastewater system and install sandbags to stop the discharge.

The Court imposed the following penalty in relation to the water pollution charge. Without recording a conviction, the Court ordered Schutz, under section 67AC of the Act, to fund a $40,000.00 environmental project in an area adjacent to Cherry Creek near Cherry Lake, and to publish this notice. The project will involve weed clearing, building a rabbit-proof fence, then restoring the area to its natural state by planting indigenous grasses. The Court also ordered Schutz to pay EPA's costs of $15,000.00.

I cut this notice out of the newspaper.
As the DCI Environmental Representative, I was interested in this environmental breech notice.

MUSIC 'People think it's the best thing that happened'

Sunbury's short history has lasting memories

STEPHANIE BUNBURY

IN 1973, Paul Murphy got off the train at Diggers Rest and walked the last few kilometres to the Sunbury Pop Festival, billed as "41 hours of non-stop entertainment".

He was only 16 and on his own, but it wasn't a lonely experience: young people were moving down that road like a tide. "The most profound thing I remember," he says, "is coming to the crest of the hill and seeing 40,000 teenagers down there with no adults."

Sunbury was Australia's own Woodstock, confirming that rock and roll was now part of our world. The first festival was held over the Australia Day weekend in 1972, but it was the 1973 edition that was recorded as a three-disc album by the new Mushroom label and soon went gold. It was the local music of that era – Spectrum, Max Merritt and the Meteors, Matt Taylor, Blackfeather – that arguably set the template for the strength of Melbourne's music scene to this day.

Rob Rowe, who got a lift to the festival with the police who picked him up hitch-hiking on a dirt road somewhere beyond St Albans – he didn't realise there were separate trains to country districts – says his most vivid recollection is just how loud Billy Thorpe and the Aztecs were. "They blew us away with that wall of sound. And seeing my first naked lady in the creek there: that sticks in my memory." And there was the smell, of course: a heady mix of Aeroguard and patchouli oil.

Rowe's profile featured in the crowd picture on the Mushroom album's gatefold sleeve. "My hair's a lot shorter and a lot greyer now, but my nose is still big." He is a bank manager now; back then, he had just started as a teller. "My aim was to have the longest hair of any State Bank teller. I hadn't had a haircut in four years."

George Duncan's hair was also considerably longer. His family's farm became the festival venue after organiser John Fowler, a television producer, approached his father. Both his parents were always organising local dances and fund-raising stalls, he remembers; as far as they were concerned, this was just another event for young people. Duncan was 21; his chief job was to get the stage into position and build the mother of all fences around it.

"We were ostracised a bit for having it," he remembers. "Our neighbours were against it. It's amazing how the attitude has changed, because now people think it's the best thing that happened: it put Sunbury on the map."

The festival only ran for two more years; the crowd dwindled to a mere 16,000 in 1975, with most of the takings going to the British headline act Deep Purple. As they recall it, the tone declined along with the takings as beery pub-rock eclipsed the era of peace and love.

Murphy said Sunbury was part of the same cultural surge as the films of Peter Weir or the theatre coming out of Carlton's Pram Factory; the Sunbury years were also the Whitlam years. "And I just didn't want to miss this wave going past," he said.

Nationals get Angry

THE Nationals have selected former rock star "Angry" Anderson, 65, to contest the Wollongong-based seat of Throsby at September's federal election.

Mr Anderson — real name Gary — was selected unopposed on Friday as the Nationals' candidate for the Labor-held seat.

The former Rose Tattoo frontman's platform would be to "give voice to the traditional Labor supporters disillusioned with the party over issues such as the carbon tax and the rising cost of living," Nationals chairman Niall Blair said in a statement.

"Angry is nothing more than your man on the street — proud of his country and, until recently, non-political."

He recently took part in the SBS documentary series Go Back to Where You Came From.

In 2011 he led an anti-carbon tax rally in Canberra.

MUSICAL

JESUS CHRIST SUPERSTAR: ARENA SPECTACULAR

Playing: Rod Laver Arena, 2pm and 8pm today

Reviewer: Kate Herbert

LAURENCE Connor's inspired UK arena production catapults the story of Jesus into the 21st century with the momentum and urgency of a youthful revolution.

Andrew Lloyd Webber's groundbreaking 1970s rock opera now includes tweets, graffiti, live video, and an exuberant chorus of dread locked feral's as Jesus's followers.

Ben Forster's Jesus is an unsophisticated, intensely human idealist who fights a losing battle among corrupt politicians, religious leaders, manic cult followers, despairing youth and a ravenous media circus.

Forster's versatile voice is thrilling and impassioned singing the rock anthem, Gethsemane, but he is equally compelling singing ballads with subtlety.

The final Crucifixion is remarkable and moving with Forster stripped, beaten and bleeding, then hoisted high on a metal grid while Judas leads a frenzied chorus of celebration. Tim Minchin's voice and performance are impeccable and his Judas is charismatic and strangely alluring. His rendition of Superstar is bold and fervent, and his death scene is the most poignant moment of all.

Ex-Spice Girl Melanie Chisholm (Mel C), is affecting as the hapless Mary Magdalene singing I Don't Know How to Love Him.

Jon Stevens is a seductive Pontius Pilate, showing the exceptional power of his gravelly rock voice while singing Trial Before Pilate.

Leon Craig (replacing the injured Andrew O'Keefe) is a riot playing King Herod as a TV host who whips the crowd into a frenzy then declares Jesus a fraud after a TV poll.

Playing the manipulative Caiaphas and his obsequious sidekick Annas, Cavin Cornwell and Gerard Bernall sing Bloody Money with contemptuous glee.

On a stage design that includes projections of government and derelict buildings, songs such as What's The Buzz, Hosanna, The Temple and Superstar assume a new relevance.

Lloyd Webber's music is dynamic, vibrant and eclectic and, with Tim Rice's cunning lyrics, the songs advance the narrative and illuminate the characters as only great music theatre can do.

Connor's production is cohesive and coherent, miraculously translating Superstar into a dangerous world of social upheaval.

We attended the screening of Star Trek - Into Darkness.

Danny Katz solves your ethics and etiquette dilemmas

My office has a policy of bringing in a birthday cake to share with co-workers on your birthday. I spent $20 on a lovely chocolate mud cake for mine, but my office manager simply bought a box of $2.95 supermarket doughnuts for hers. Am I right to feel aggrieved?
T.F., BALLINA, NSW

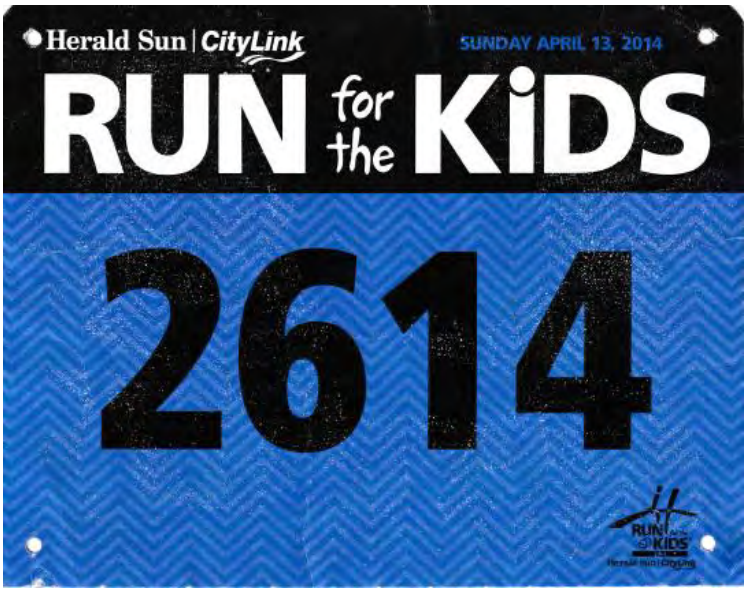

My workplace has the exact same birthday tradition, except I work from home and I work alone. So whenever a birthday comes around – roughly once a year – I bring out a packet of Arnott's Full O'Fruit, sing Happy Birthday to myself, yell out "Hip, hip", answer with a "Hooray!", then stand around awkwardly with a cup of instant coffee, not knowing what to say to myself because, even though we've worked together for years, we've never had much in common.

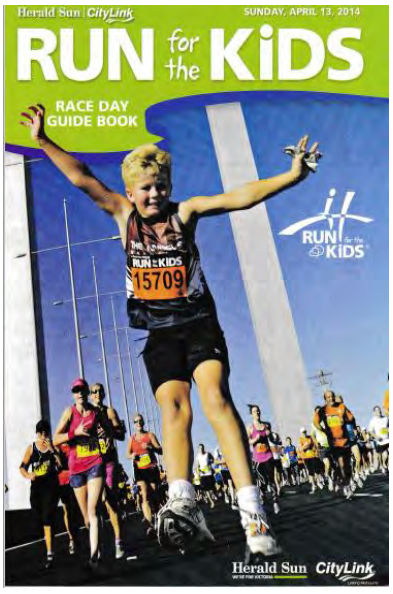

Which is the point, really. Your co-workers are just co-workers, they don't really care about you or your birthday or the cake. They just want a short break from the brain-busting drudgery of work life and wouldn't be fussed if it was a fancy mud cake or a box of super-stale doughnuts with green furry sprinkles that may have grown there by themselves.

You're trying too hard, you're over-thinking. Next birthday, bring in a jar of Nutella and a plastic sharing spoon, hand it around, sing Happy Birthday, and leave it at that. And avoid going out after work for birthday drinks: I did that once, got hammered, made out with myself in the backyard, then had to hide from myself the next morning in the office. Stupid, stupid, stupid! You'd think I'd have learnt after that drunken bathroom escapade at the staff Christmas party.

OLD IS GOLD FOR FOO FIGHTERS

REVIEW
AARON LANGMAID

IF the secret to success is constant reinvention, the Foo Fighters should probably have been relegated to the back pages of pop culture about a decade ago.

Last night they walked into a packed Etihad Stadium and served up a rock formula not too dissimilar from what they might have delivered to a smoky venue way back when. In a week when the queen of pop choked on her cape and collapsed on stage, the kings of rock showed that simple is sometimes best.

Sure it's a grander stage; synchronised lighting and stadium sound. But the band's staple ingredient remains the same: less whiz, more bang.

It's the onstage affability of Dave Grohl and his band mates that really sell a show like this — cheesy grins and the occasional rock star scream.

It took just one anthem, My Hero, and the staggering performance from drummer Taylor Hawkins, to set the night's tone.

"We don't play those little 1½-hour concerts," Grohl declared. "We don't play those two-hour long rock concerts ... We're gonna play till we can't play anymore."

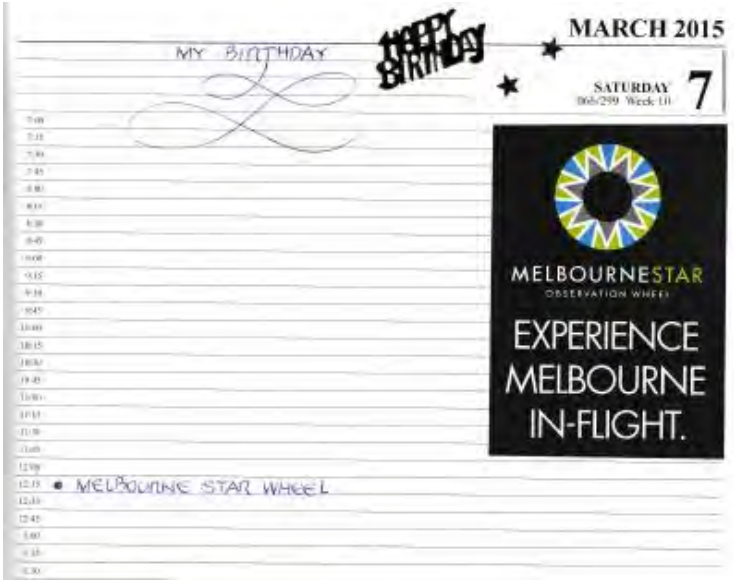

There were mid-90s originals for the thirtysomethings; classic covers and latest contributions from the album Sonic Highway.

Showing his trademark humour, Grohl invited a couple on stage and watched as the guy proposed, following up with a cover of David Bowie's Under Pressure.

Saw the FOO FIGHTERS at Etihad Stadium as part of the Sonic Highways World Tour.

STRAP IN FOR A THRILL RIDE

MAD MAX: FURY ROAD (MA15+)
FASTER, FURIOSA AND TOTALLY FULL-ON, US, 118 MIN

Challenging and aggressively captivating throughout, Mad Max: Fury Road will come to be regarded as a modern masterpiece of action filmmaking. While Fury Road is simply one protracted, adrenaline-guzzling chase sequence that cannot and will not ever let up, it never gets ahead of itself. Exploring an exciting new tangent of the Mad Max myth, Fury Road sees post-apocalyptic nomad Max (Tom Hardy, ably replacing Mel Gibson) join forces with female freedom fighter Furiosa (a stunning Charlize Theron) on a devastating journey across the baddest badlands imaginable. Where Fury Road is destined to truly leave a massive mark is with its astonishing visual composition. The contents of every frame — from the mind-boggling camera placements to the breathtaking (and reputedly CGI-free) stunt choreography — contributes to what becomes a sustained assault on the senses. The viewer is strapped into this throttling thrill-ride from the get-go. Once everything begins barrelling forward at ever-increasing speed, there can be no turning back. A directorial triumph for veteran filmmaker George Miller.

CLASSIC TALE A HEADY MIX

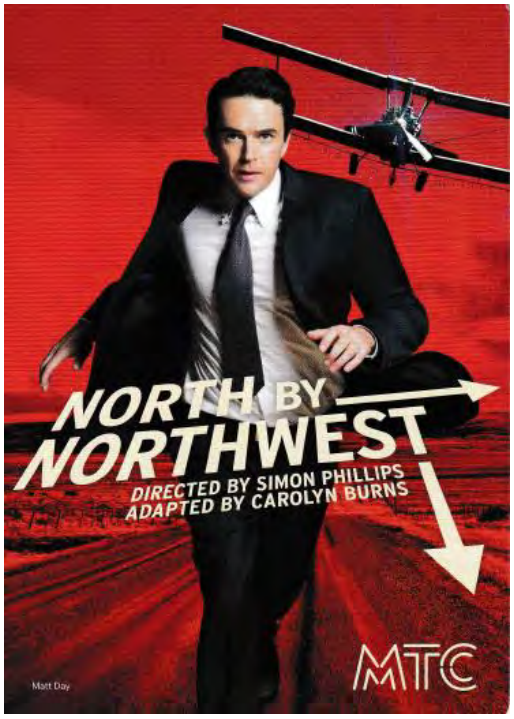

NORTH BY NORTHWEST (PG)
GOING OFF WITH A HITCH. US. 136 MIN.

So refreshing to see that age has not wearied this Alfred Hitchcock classic (screening multiple times this weekend in a limited run at the Nova). First and foremost, the script (penned by Ernest Lehman) is a stunner. Beneath that deliberately cryptic combination of murder, mystery and mayhem that Hitchcock so loved to deploy, beats the heart of a teasingly absurd social farce. Without giving too much away, the film derives much of its mischievous momentum from plummeting the high-flying, hyper-suave Cary Grant (playing a millionaire ad exec still under the thumb of his mother) into a dramatic fall from grace when he is mistaken for a notorious, rarely seen secret agent. Co-stars Eva Marie Saint, James Mason.

A residency in Reservoir offers a worrying glimpse of extinction.

My artist friends get residencies in New York, Kyoto, Reykjavik. I got one in Reservoir. Further out than Courtney Barnett's Depreston, "Reza" is Melbourne's loveable mongrel suburb with a rail and road intersection behemoth you can see from the moon.

I rode the South Morang train up there every day for a fortnight to draw the natives, the fruits of which I'm turning into a little newspaper called Reservoiria.

Reservoir is post-war and pre-gentrification. You're starting to see property developer wankers in suits barking bad grammar into hands-free phones, but mostly Reservoir is still old people comfortably dressed in slacks and beige cable-knit cardigans.

Mooching on street furniture, I feel like an eldercare male nurse on an extended lunch break. Around me the infirm push trolleys and wait for buses to arrive, lights to change and results to come back from radiology. The absence of mums with prams or kids on

Thommo a true original with a bowling action to match

What you see is what you get with one of Australia's greatest bowlers.

Martin Flanagan

I was 18 when Jeff "Thommo" Thomson – inducted this week into Cricket Australia's Hall of Fame – burst on the scene as a fast bowler for Australia. I was still playing cricket, which helps in your appreciation of fast bowlers because you have burning memories of what it is to be hit by a hard ball flung in your direction at speed by people with questionable motives.

Dennis Lillee had torn the English asunder in England in 1972, bowling with a wild jerky action that delivered the ball at thunderbolt pace but also wrecked his back. He returned two years later with a far smoother action and one of his accomplishments as a cricketer was that he bowled just as effectively with the learned method. But Lillee called it his "skilful" style and said he preferred the one he had before. He liked making batsmen jump.

Lillee was a fearful proposition in his own right when Thomson appeared on the Test scene, having already achieved notoriety by saying he liked hitting batsmen and seeing blood on the pitch. That was all I knew of the quote until recently, when I saw it given in full and noted that it ended, "and I train on whisky", which suggests the whole thing might have been tongue-in-cheek. But if he didn't aim to leave blood on the wicket he bowled in a fashion which made it an ever present possibility.

I hadn't seen the likes of Thommo when he was first selected for Australia in 1974-75 but an older generation had. They'd seen the classically educated Englishman Frank "Typhoon" Tyson who ended his days as a master at Melbourne's Carey Grammar. Tyson once wrote, in his precise, elegant way, "To bowl fast is to revel in the glad animal action". That was Thommo.

that produced ferocious power and speed. He was measured at 160 km/h and there are plenty who say he bowled a good deal faster. His action meant his head was partially turned away from the wicket when he released the ball, which meant he could only have so much control of where it was going. That's what made him so dangerous. He had a mean reputation and played like he didn't care what people made of him.

Thomson and Lillee destroyed England in the 1974-75 Test series. Former great Keith Miller said Thomson scared him watching from the stands. Thomson scared me watching on a black and white TV in Tasmania. Thomson said his deliveries "jumped like a cobra" and they did. There were no helmets. The crowds booed for blood and hourly got it.

His speech was so original, so earthy, so lacking in artifice or guile.

About 10 years later, I met Thommo at a Sheffield Shield match between Queensland and Tasmania in Launceston. I was introduced to him by shield player and photojournalist Mark Ray, a New South Welshman who was then playing for Tasmania. I was privileged to listen in on their conversation about Queensland's new fast bowler, the young Craig McDermott. Thomson was colloquial, friendly, direct. Like other sporting heroes I've met, he was an ordinary man with something extraordinary about him – a primal force, a fearlessness. He was unashamedly himself.

Asked once to describe his bowling action, he said, "I just shuffled in and went wang". In an interview with Nagraj Gollapudi at Cricinfo, Thomson said of bowling coaches: "They create all these jobs and then you've got all these parasites hanging around. I'm not saying all of them are parasites, but there's a lot of bullshitters around. If I was a young bloke wanting to know about fast bowling, I would ask somebody who's been there and done it."

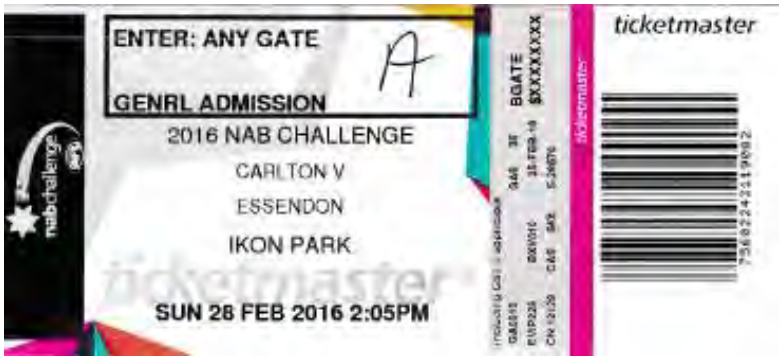

Thomson did become a coach, though. Asked to explain his approach when speaking to players, he said, "I don't ask how, I ask why."

Thommo had a big few days in the media this week. On Monday, when he was asked by a Sydney journalist about the omission of Usman Khawaja from Australia's one-day team, he was characteristically forthright: "He is a proper batsman. He is not one of those one-hit wonder yahoos. They are very limited in that they can go over cow corner or stand aside and slash over the covers. People work them out very quickly but he has all the shots because he stands there and bats properly."

On Wednesday, his acceptance speech at his Hall of Fame induction won quick applause on social media simply because it was so original, so earthy, so lacking in artifice or guile.

About five years ago, Fairfax Media decided to write a series on the legends of Australian sport. I was assigned Jeff Thomson. I cracked down a number and rang. A voice answered like a man busy with his work. I said who I was and inquired about the possibility of me interviewing him "for a series we were doing on legends of Australian sport". There was a pause, then a burst of incredulity. In the background, I could hear hammering. "I'm here trying to build a house and you ring me with that sort of shit!" he cried. That one quote said it all really.

Thommo was inducted into Cricket Australia's Hall of Fame on Monday January 25, 2016.
His acceptance speech won quick applause on social media simply because it was so original, so earthy, so genuine and certainly stole the show.

You can best describe the traffic on Melbourne's roads as gridlocked. Driving is now a nightmare.

Are we there yet?

SPECIAL REPORT

Adam Carey

The volume of traffic on Melbourne's freeways is on course to double in just 20 years, new VicRoads data shows.

Car and truck traffic has grown so rapidly in the past decade that on an average weekday more than 1 million people now travel on Melbourne's busiest road, the Monash/CityLink/West Gate corridor between Pakenham and Werribee.

About 900,000 trips are taken on the M1 freeway corridor each weekday. The freeway was widened at a cost of $1.4 billion in 2011 but traffic to and from the outer suburbs is growing so fast that it is about to be widened again just five years later.

The city's freeways carry 50 per cent more traffic now than they did 10 years ago, mostly in the outer suburbs, VicRoads' most recent analysis of Melbourne traffic reveals.

The explosion in freeway traffic between 2005 and 2014 rivals the huge patronage boom seen on Melbourne's trains and exceeds the high growth rate on trams and buses that occurred during the same period.

By contrast, volumes on the city's inner-city freeways and its arterial roads have virtually flatlined, rising 2 per cent between 2005 and 2014.

This minimal growth includes tram and bus traffic and is a sign, VicRoads says, that the city's network of main roads is so congested it is stretched to the brink of capacity.

The uneven nature of traffic growth on Melbourne's roads is revealed in VicRoads' 2014 Traffic Monitor. All up, Melbourne traffic volumes grew 16 per cent in the 10 years the report analysed.

In an interview with Fairfax Media, VicRoads chief John Merritt said the state's roads authority had developed a two-pronged strategy to prevent Melbourne traffic grinding to a halt: continued expansion of freeway capacity and improved tram and bus priority on key arterial roads.

STAR TREK BEYOND (M)

STILL LIVING LONG, AND PROSPERING, US, 122 MIN

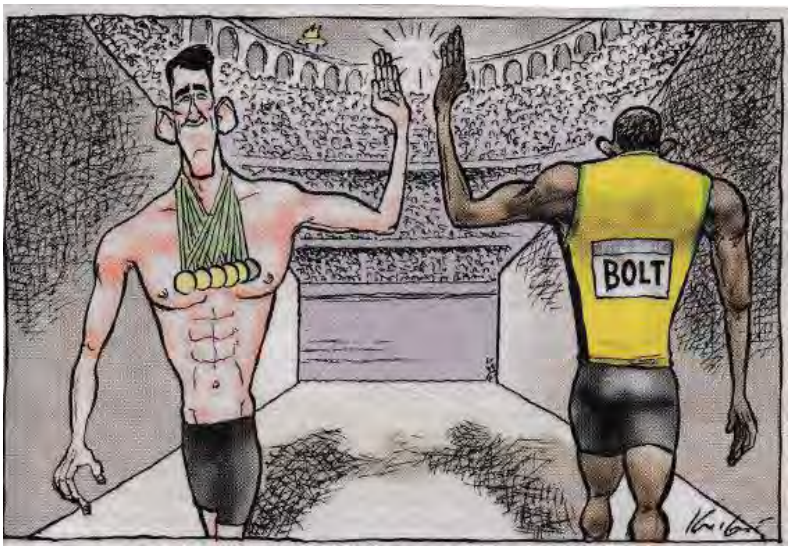

The Enterprise has crash-landed on a far-flung planet. Comms are down, and the crew are dispersed across a wide and inhospitable region. The 13th Star Trek movie is not the best from the long-running sci-fi franchise. However, it is certainly the best looking. The visuals depicting the latest deep-space exploits of Captain Kirk (Chris Pine) and his loyal offsiders are often nothing short of awe-inspiring. While Star Trek Beyond absolutely delivers as a pure, pulse-raising spectacle, it is also none too shabby as a rollicking adventure yarn. Dedicated Trekkers will immediately detect that the experience plays out like an extended TV episode — this isn't a movie big on character development or sophisticated themes — but won't mind getting caught up in the relentless rush and hustle of it all. Of course, it helps no end that director Justin Lin (a veteran of four Fast & Furious instalments) has the luxury of several exciting set-piece action sequences to fall back on as required. Co-stars Zachary Quinto, Idris Elba, Zoe Saldana.

HUDSON MIRACLE TAKES FLIGHT

SULLY (M)

IN A SHOW OF STRENGTH, HE WENT TO WATER, US, 96 MIN

The latest film to be directed by Clint Eastwood relives one of the great moments in aviation history. If not for the quick thinking of veteran US pilot Captain Chesley "Sully" Sullenberger, it would definitely have been one of the worst moments. On January 15, 2009, US Airways Flight 1549 completed a regulation takeoff from New York's LaGuardia Airport. Just six minutes later, the Airbus A320 carrying 155 passengers and crew had come to a standstill in the middle of the Hudson River. Incredibly, all aboard survived. While Eastwood has a great story to work with in terms of pure quality, quantity could have been a problem (Sullenberger only had three minutes to put the bird in the drink). Luckily, the filmmaker was smart enough to cast Tom Hanks (right), cinema's greatest living everyman, as modest and unassuming Sully. A no-frills, low-thrills tale of heroism that quietly draws the right levels of admiration and inspiration from the viewer.

Murder over $50 dispute

A woman who killed her housemate in a dispute over $50 has been found guilty of murder.

Alicia Schiller, 27, cried on Friday when a Supreme Court jury found her guilty of murdering Tyrelle Evertsen-Motsert, 32, who was stabbed several times in her Norlane home on the night of November 9, 2014. She died from a stab wound to the chest. Schiller pleaded not guilty to murder. The trial heard Schiller attacked her housemate after learning Ms Evertsen-Motsert had taken $50 from her bedroom to buy drugs.

Justice Elizabeth Hollingworth remanded Schiller in custody for a pre-sentence hearing next year. Adam Cooper

6 WAYS TO GET WRITING TODAY

Need some handwriting practice? Peebles suggests these exercises:

1. Write down a happy thought about your life every day in a gratitude diary (try to make it regular even if it's not daily).
2. Copy out phrases or a whole section from one of your favourite books.
3. Actually write – and send – a birthday card to a close friend or family member.
4. Write out a detailed shopping list adding brands, quantities and which shops you want to visit.
5. Scribe that letter to the person who has hurt you (then immediately burn it!).
6. Send a handwritten thank you note to tell someone that you appreciate them.

I cut this out of the newspaper as it emphasises the importance of hand writing, which is one of my passions.

LIFE (MA15+)
WHEN ALLOWING AN ENTRY IS TO ACCELERATE AN EXIT, US, 103 MIN
You really want to know the meaning of Life? Don't ever let it in. And for cryin out loud, if you do happen to let it in ... don't ever, ever let it out. A slick, suspenseful and stomach-churning sci-fi thriller, Life is the perfect Alien movie right now for those getting all twitchy waiting for the next Alien movie (Ridley Scott's Alien: Covenant, which drops in May). So if you dig the sight of an angry, ugly and hungry extraterrestrial organism sneaking around a spacecraft to play a game of hide-and-seek-and-eat, then Life will deliver everything you like in just the right amounts. Jake Gyllenhaal, Ryan Reynolds and Rebecca Ferguson spearhead a small crew of scientists and techies aboard the International Space Station. When a soil sample taken from the surface of Mars points to the possible existence of life on the red planet, a protocol error results in mistakes that should never be made when hosting a disgruntled interplanetary visitor.

ALIEN: COVENANT (MA15+)

BACK AGAIN TO WIPE THE SMILE OFF THEIR SPACE. US, 123 MIN

Director Ridley Scott's intention to end his career with a trilogy of Alien pictures is great news for fans who first boarded the seminal sci-fi horror franchise in the late 1970s. The project has started rolling in fine style with Alien: Covenant, a clinically assured deep-space chiller. Scott deftly combines the obligatory chest-bursting gore of the classic Alien movies with the mind-expanding philosophical questing of 2012's divisive demi-prequel Prometheus. That tricky balance between body count and brain food is very sweetly struck indeed. A desolate, dread-magnetising story picks up a decade after the events of Prometheus. The crew of a spaceship on a mission to colonise a new world make an unscheduled exploratory pit-stop on a planet that appears to be a spectacularly habitable match for their needs. Spoiler alert: it is not. While not in the same league as the iconic first two Alien outings, this marks a solid return (and promising repositioning) for the long-running saga. Stars Katherine Waterston, Michael Fassbender, Billy Crudup.

POSTCODE / 3073

By JAYNE D'ARCY

Reservoir. Even its name is conflicting. First, the reservoirs, built in 1863, are actually collectively called Preston Reservoir.

Secondly, how do you pronounce it? Is it French-like, with a lovely "voir" at the end? Or local-like with a strict "vor"? When I was a local, I'd set those fancy talkers straight. "It's 'vor'," I'd say.

Or you can call it Rezza. But I don't know anyone who does.

People are flocking here. The hipster cafes have moved in to froth up almond milk for lattes, and young tattooed families (not the love/hate on both knuckles type, though that might be in these days, who knows?) have moved in to sip them.

The suburb's median house price is $635,000, according to Domain Group data. Prices are up 13.4 per cent from last year. With Preston at $844,000, Coburg at $850,000 and Thornbury at $970,000 in September's figures, you can see why it's where would-be buyers of the north are heading.

It's not unusual to find million-dollar sales. Developers are still snapping up big blocks to build townhouses on them.

CRAIG SILLITOE

Reservoir Village, near the main train station, hasn't seen much change, apart from some new apartment blocks going up. Still, it's trying.

You could hashtag #reservoirsome on Instagram and Facebook back in August and win prizes. A highlight: Lady Bower Kitchen opened off Broadway four years ago, and is still going strong.

It's the residential areas of Reservoir that are making something out of not much. Gellibrand Cafe, on Gellibrand Crescent, opened this year. The huge cafe is in a small shopping strip separated from the rest of Reservoir by a "do not cross" railway line.

The railway line is an imaginary divide, says one local.

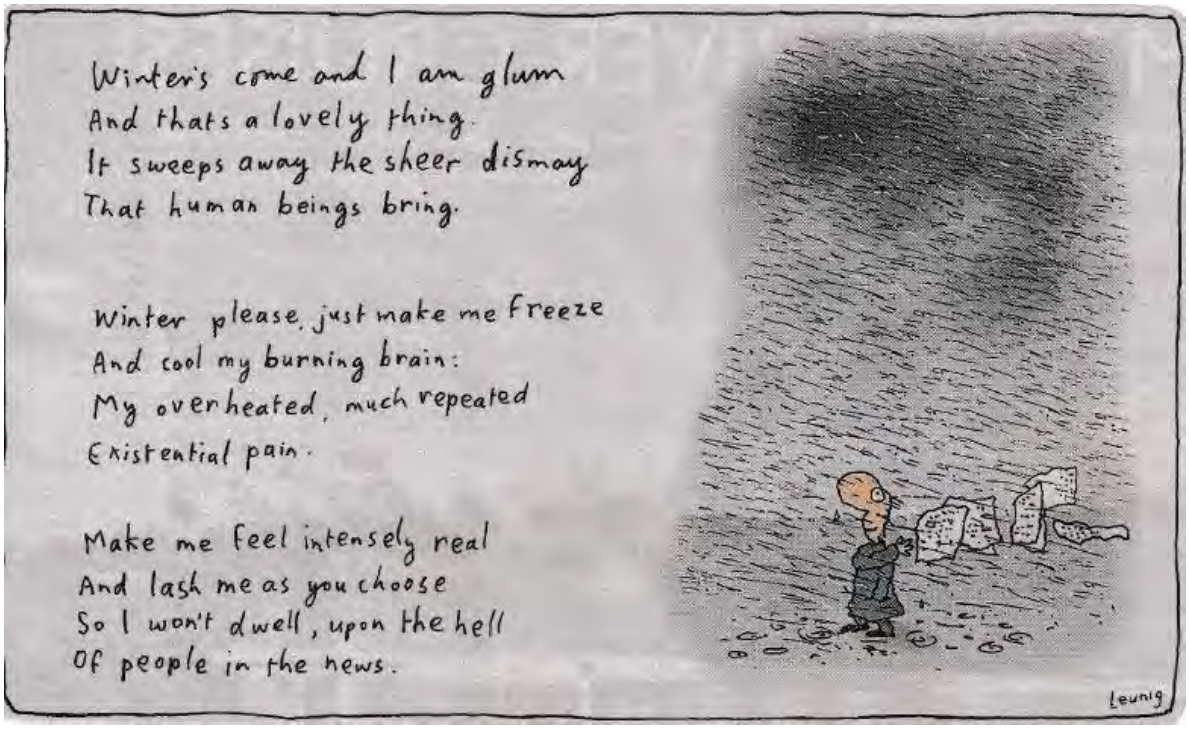

Head up closer to the reservoirs, in a pretty part of Reservoir, and you'll find queues at The Window Corner cafe. Former inner-city types are trying their best to get some creative musical action happening in Reservoir, too.

Always kept an interest in the suburb of Reservoir.

JOHN SILVESTER

Ross the Boss: the King of Radio

It was Saturday morning. I awoke with a headache. This was not unusual. The previous evening had begun in the Police Club in pursuit of a story and ended in the early hours consuming a Lygon Street capricciosa pizza and a bottle of merlot. This was also not unusual.

The bedroom radio was tuned to 3RRR when I heard my name mentioned. I was being lampooned on air by a smart-arse lawyer suggesting my page one story was a piece of cliche-ridden tripe.

Sadly he was right.

"Sleazy street types laden with chunky gold jewellery," he read with equal measures of disdain and glee. It was Ross Stevenson, then half of a program called Lawyers, Guns and Money that had developed its own cult following within Melbourne's legal fraternity.

Apparently I rang the program (I have no recollection of this, which is also not unusual) and instead of defending myself pleaded guilty to assaulting the English language. Ross was surprised to speak to a journalist who didn't have a glass jaw and was happy to be the butt of the joke. That was 1988. We have been friends ever since.

he doesn't force his views on anyone. While he can interview a political heavyweight as well as anyone, he rarely does, for he has become bored with their formulated responses.

And lastly he doesn't take his success for granted. While some flock to opening nights Ross is at home. The program, he says, must come first.

The industry is full of stories of bullies and drama queens who think they are kingmakers. They demand upgrades on planes, the best table at restaurants and mistakenly believe the public hang on their every word.

Ross doesn't even have an office, preferring to bunk with his team, cracking jokes over coffee before heading off just after 9am to places unknown, which may occasionally involve taking early afternoon sustenance. (If lunch was an Olympic event, while Burns would win gold Ross would certainly finish on the podium.)

His secret, I think, is that he is an everyman – an extraordinary talent with ordinary tastes. He goes to the footy, plays with his kids, loves a punt and his partner, Sarah Fallshaw, would take some air out of his tyres if he got a tad too inflated.

I cut this article out of The Age on Saturday, November 18, 2017.
I have been a long time listener to talkback radio 3AW, going back to the 1980's when their lineup included John Blackman, Bruce (Uncle Roy) Mansfield, Derryn Hinch, Muriel Cooper, Mark Day and Ray Taylor et al.
But throughout my 40 odd years listening to AW, none of them could hold a candle to Ross Stevenson.
This article, penned by fellow breakfast program contributor John Silvester (aka Sly of the Underworld), reinforces my sentiments towards him. A welcomed, highly entertaining and whip smart voice every morning at 5.30am.

"Raped while dying, and still no arrest....
How come,
Chief Willoughby?"

THREE BILLBOARDS OUTSIDE EBBING, MISSOURI (MA15+)

IT PAINS TO ADVERTISE. US. 115 MIN.
Funny, sad, wildly unpredictable and shrewdly insightful, this gripping drama is a movie that defiantly marches to the beat of its own drum. Nevertheless, the performances are so emphatically strong — and the writing is so searingly sublime — you will fall into line with its unusual rhythm without even realising it. Frances McDormand (the current Best Actress Oscar fave for her work here) plays Mildred Hayes, an angry and determined woman frustrated by local police's handling of the investigation of her daughter's recent death. Taking matters into her hands, Mildred erects a trio of billboards taunting the cops to get off their butts and get busy. The radical gesture opens up cracks in Mildred's tight-knit rural community that anyone could have seen coming, especially the beleaguered police chief Willoughby (Woody Harrelson) and his redneck deputy Dixon (Sam Rockwell). The mercurial, unpredictable nature of the film is actually its secret weapon. You will be leaning forward intently to catch what's coming next. Highly recommended.

MOVIE OF THE WEEK

BLACK PANTHER (M)

LASHING OUT POWERFULLY, WITH CLAWS AND EFFECT. US, 134 MIN

Black Panther doesn't just hit its marks. It leaves marks. Landmarks. As the first Marvel movie blockbuster to put a superhero of colour at the epicentre of the action, much fuss will undoubtedly be made of the significant blows that Black Panther strikes so emphatically. Not just in the interests of racial diversity (the movie's raucous, yet respectful embrace of black culture and history is a breakthrough Hollywood moment), but also gender equality (the women of Black Panther are no passengers in this fast-moving tale, they propel it just as much as the males). An involving plot tracks the dramatic rise, fall and resurrection of T'Challa (Chadwick Boseman), young ruler of the mysteriously insular and technologically advanced African nation of Wakanda. In his secret superhero guise of Black Panther, T'Challa leads an elite, predominantly female fighting force to fend off a destructive wave of threats to his homeland's future. Co-stars Michael B. Jordan, Lupita Nyong'o, Andy Serkis.

Universe of heroes comes together for battle to end all battles ... almost

FILM OF THE WEEK

Balancing act a marvel

AFTER 18 butt-kicking action adventures spanning 10 box-office-busting years, it has come to this.

Anybody who is anybody in Marvel's rich and extraordinarily colourful universe converges for Avengers: Infinity War, an epic film even in this cut-sized environment.

Egos are bruised, of course, as the alpha superheroes attempt to establish a pecking order (the women take a more collaborative approach).

Iron Man (Robert Downey Jr) reveals hitherto unsuspected insecurities in a witty sparring match with Doctor Strange (Benedict Cumberbatch) at the Bleecker St Sanctum Sanctorum.

There's also a chuckleworthy argy-bargy aboard the Milano between Thor (Chris Hemsworth) and Star-Lord (Chris Pratt), whose masculinity is threatened by the Norse God's iron-hard musculature.

Tom Holland's junior Spidey spins one-liners as adroitly as he shoots webs.

"Oh, we are using made-up names?" he says, on introduction to Doctor Strange. "In that case, I'm Spider-Man."

Rocket Raccoon (Bradley Cooper), Drax (Dave Bautista) and Groot (Vin Diesel) are similarly adept at running comic interference.

Directors Anthony and Joe Russo, working from a screenplay by their Captain America: Civil War collaborators Christopher Markus and Stephen McFeely, do an exceptional job of balancing the fun-poking humour and self-referential asides with powerful, emotionally-involving drama.

With a villain as potent as Thanos (Josh Brolin), there's no doubting just how much there is at stake.

Physically, the granite-chinned behemoth dwarfs even Mark Ruffalo's Hulk (who Bruce Banner is having a hard time coming out.)

Gamora's (Zoe Saldana) stepfather is one of the most interesting evildoers in Marvel history (the pair's relationship is one of the fulcrums upon which Infinity War turns).

In his own warped mind, Thanos will be the saviour of an overtaxed, unsustainable universe when he wipes out half the population as the other half can thrive.

To do so, he must collect the six Infinity Stones that have been scattered to the far ends of the cosmos. He's prepared to make extreme sacrifices to succeed.

Infinity War moves seamlessly between light and shade. And the filmmakers manipulate a diverse and eclectic cast of thousands with assurance, interweaving more than a dozen storylines in almost as many registers.

The ending is powerful enough to stop even the Avengers and their allies in their tracks (no spoilers here.)

One might almost describe Avengers: Infinity War as the battle to end all battles — were it not for the fact that the final sequence raises almost as many questions as it answers, and that the next instalment is already in post-production.

ROCK STAR'S SON 'BEATEN TO DEATH'

On Monday November 5, 2018 while in Bali I got up for my early morning walk along Legian beach. There was a local selling Australian newspapers, so I purchased The Australian. To my shock and horror I read the headline above. "The son of rocker Gary "Angry" Anderson has been remembered as a passionate rap musician and lyricist after the 26-year-old was allegedly beaten to death on Sydney's northern beaches in the early hours of yesterday morning".

KITCHEN SINK DRAMA

True love

BY Paul Connolly

Five weeks after Stephen and Kathleen started dating, he felt their relationship was ready for a critical test. So without embellishment or undue caution he bravely passed wind in front of her, then looked up as if he'd asked a question – which in a way, he had. Her rich laugh gave him the answer he'd hoped for, but it wasn't until she bent forward and, with hands on knees, unleashed a fart of such ferociousness and pungency that it literally took his breath away, that he knew he'd found something truly special.

I loved Paul Connolly's

Book in this tale of black and white

GREEN BOOK (M)
SMOOTH RIDE ON A ROUGH ROAD, US, 130 MIN

All that Green Book delivers is two blokes with short fuses on a long road trip. A white guy sits upfront, doing all the driving, and making all the small talk. A black guy sits in the back, doing his best not to listen or respond, and inevitably failing miserably at both. On paper, it doesn't seem like much. On screen, however, this possibly static premise comes alive very vividly and oh-so memorably. This is the true story of venerated African-American jazz pianist Don Shirley (a majestic display from Moonlight's Mahershala Ali) and his brawny Italian-American driver Tony Vallelonga (a lovably lug-headed Viggo Mortensen). Together, the pair undertake a deceptively dangerous 1962 concert tour of the US Deep South, a region that seems like another planet to both men for different yet bonding reasons. This is a genuinely irresistible feel-good film of the highest calibre, capturing a rare spark between two great actors while maintaining a fire in its belly when it comes to matters of acceptance, tolerance and understanding.

The theme of my address to the DCI employees was;

I reflected on four reasons to call time on my career at DCI;
I had completed 40 years in the workforce, I had reached my preservation age of 57 which meant I could access my super, my wife had stopped working and my father sadly passed away at the age of 57 so I want to enjoy my retirement in good health.

Sandy Roberts on the set of Fox Footy, where he has commentated for the past five years.

Sandy calls time on TV

JON ANDERSON

ONE of Australia's best-known sports commentators, Sandy Roberts, has announced his retirement from television broadcasting.

It draws the curtain on a career that began 46 years ago at BCV in Bendigo before going to Channel 7 in Adelaide.

He arrived in Melbourne after the 1980 Moscow Olympics.

Roberts leaves the commentary box having called more than 1100 AFL/VFL games, 19 Grand Finals, eight summer Olympics and 25 years of golf and tennis.

He was the voice that told us "there's a pig at full forward" at the SCG and "what more can you say?" when Gary Ablett Snr kicked goal of the year at the MCG.

"I want to thank the viewers for welcoming me into their loungerooms for almost five decades," said Roberts, 68, who will continue to call on radio.

"It has been an honour and now it's time to hand over the commentary box to the young guns."

He said leaving Fox Footy would free up his time. "Our son, Angus, is doing Year 12 and is captain of the school tennis team so I'm looking forward to watching him," he said.

On the same day veteran sports commentator Sandy Roberts announced his retirement from television broadcasting.

THE MULE (M)
SHUFFLING ALONG THE CORRIDORS OF POWDER. US, 116 MIN.
At the age of 88, Clint Eastwood defiantly remains one of a kind. Here he is, not only directing The Mule, but also taking the lead role (just his second acting assignment in the past decade). Unfortunately, the veteran star is not in the best of form, either side of the camera. The source material cannot be faulted: this is the fascinating true story of an old-timer who became the most effective courier in the operations of a leading Mexican drug cartel. In his late 80s, Earl Stone (Eastwood) was completing long-haul cocaine shipments along American highways right under the noses of federal narcotics agents. A disconcertingly frail Eastwood labours hard to play his character as a loveable rogue with his heart in the right place, but his efforts never quite convince as they should. Bradley Cooper (A Star is Born) chimes in with some fair work as the narc on Earl's tail, but he's mostly sidelined by an under-written screenplay. Not unwatchable by any stretch, but could have been so much better in the hands of another filmmaker.

This incredible Oscar-winning doco introduces you to 33-year-old professional climber Alex Honnold. His specialty is climbing alone, without the use of a single rope, or any protective gear. One wrong move, and he's almost certain to die. As beautifully and insightfully as this film is shot, you will spend much of it hoping Honnold doesn't go through with a possible suicide mission. But he does. And what transpires is one of the greatest action sequences to ever grace the big screen. Highly (and heart-in-mouth-ingly) recommended.

AVENGERS: ENDGAME (M)

ALL GOOD THINGS COME TO AN ENDGAME.
US, 181 MIN

This might be the Endgame, Avengers fans, but one thing is for certain this truly epic and totally spectacular push for the finish line is everything you hoped for. So welcome aboard the 22nd and most important journey yet into the Marvel Cinematic Universe (MCU). Strap yourself in for a bumpy ride. Expect to get a little lost along the way. And bear in mind you may not always have a lot of company. This last proviso is most important in light of the funereal crescendo upon which Avengers: Infinity War signed off just 12 months ago. In what is now regarded as one of the great cliffhangers in movie history, the once-bustling ranks of the Avengers superhero stable were thinned down alarmingly in one fell swoop. Now those who survived must regroup to repel the enduring threat of the dreaded despot Thanos. Even at a mammoth running time of three hours, not a minute is wasted en route to a jaw-dropping date with fate that has irreversible implications for the entire MCU. Stars Robert Downey Jr, Josh Brolin, Chris Evans, Chris Hemsworth.

The death of former Labor PM Bob Hawke overshadowed the final day of campaigning yesterday, with Bill Shorten calling off a planned trip to Queensland as a mark of respect for a political giant who has been mourned worldwide.

Reptilean roar power returns

GODZILLA: KING OF THE MONSTERS (M)

AT ITS BEST WHEN ALL GETS TO MUNCH, US, 131 MIN

A passable sequel to Godzilla, the 2014 reboot that stomped, whomped and chomped its way to blockbuster box-office receipts. Monster-movie enthusiasts generally liked that first one, even if peeved by Godzilla not bothering to show up until 80 minutes in. Though the radically radioactive reptile's tardiness issues have not been seen to, the filmmakers have found a better way to fill the wait until Godzilla is unleashed. Make that three better ways, via the resurrection of Godzilla's most infamous super-species enemies in Rodan, Mothra and the tri-headed demon dragon Ghidorah. All roads (and roars) lead to an epic final smackdown showcasing some quite impressive visual effects. As with the last film, the spectacle is repeatedly undermined by cutaways to pesky little humans with their puny sub-plots and buzz-killing backstories. Their principal function is to look upwards, look worried, and keep just enough of a safe distance from their marauding co-stars.

TERMINATOR: DARK FATE

(MA15+)

BRIGHT NEW LIFE FOR THE FRANCHISE THAT CAN'T BE KILLED. US, 128 MIN

True Terminator fans will immediately recognise just how good this sixth instalment in the 35-year-old saga can be when it truly hits its stride. All the contradictions, paradoxes and clangers sounded out by the latter-day sequels are silenced once and for all, with the story only really acknowledging developments logged in the first two movies as relevant reference points. The action sequences kick ass repeatedly, the new characters rock, and the old-school reunion of Terminator icons Arnold Schwarzenegger and Linda Hamilton — together again on screen for the first time in almost three decades — hits it right out of the park. In the interests of keeping everything spoiler-free as possible, let's not go into how the two franchise stalwarts fit into the Dark Fate jigsaw. Instead, rest assured that the straightforward tale of a new killing machine from the future (Gabriel Luna) out to stop a young Mexican woman (Natalia Reyes) from her coming role in a resistance against all machines will have you in its thrall from go to whoa.

Farewell 2019

2020 was obliterated by a global pandemic.
